THE MONIER HERITAGE LOOK
A fine romance

Get the look: Respecting a heritage home

Annie has owned her heritage home in the NSW Southern Highlands, a 130-year-old grand Federation home, for 10 years, and says it was so well preserved when she bought it that she hasn't had to do much work on it since.

"The inside had been renovated, which was great," she says. "One of the bathrooms is original, which I loved. It has a new freestanding bath and vanity... but the original tiles are still there."

The biggest change Annie did was to add a separate wing to the house, which she turned into accommodation. "It's completely separate to the main house," she says. "And I get people staying there, which is great."

With such a special property, Annie says she was careful about the choices when it came to re-roofing - both in the product used and the tilers she chose. The terracotta tiles on the house were mostly original - and more than 130 years old, which demonstrates the product's longevity. Indeed, the colour had remained just as strong as when they were first laid, proving that Terracotta outlasts any other roofing product in terms of colour.

She decided to stay with the same product, choosing Monier's Terracotta Marseille tiles in Earth colour, which reflect the original aesthetic and style.

The result is that the roof doesn't look much different - just a little fresher and tidier, she says.

"Terracotta is always good. And even if it weathers a bit over the decades, it's still lovely. I loved the old roof. But it does have to be replaced eventually, although 130 years is pretty good."

Interestingly, the original tiles were still in relatively good shape, says Annie, and might have been fine for a few more decades, if it wasn't for the local possums.

Another nice addition was the use of Monier's new Elemental™ Slate product, on a side awning. Their slate-like appearance kept to the heritage theme without dominating the main roof.

Annie chose Michael from Tim and Terry Tilers, for the work, as they work exclusively with Monier Roofing and had just the expertise she needed for such a delicate job.

1 Stick to the original materials, whenever possible

Annie chose the same style of terracotta roof tiles that were used by the original builders, ensuring that the home respected its history.

2 Cater for the four seasons in your garden

In the Southern Highlands, Annie gets to experience winter frosts, spring bulbs and gorgeous autumn colours as well as a sunny January.

3 Elemental™ Slate

An awning at the side of the house was updated with the Elemental™ Slate roofing solution in Inkstone, reflecting the look of the original slate tiles.

4 Timber shingles

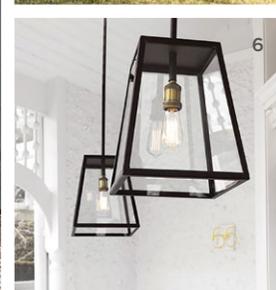

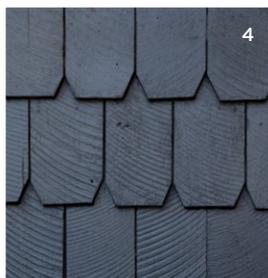

The house was clad in timber shingles, which Annie painted in a dark charcoal to give it a modern touch.

5 Potted colour

Annie has touches of potted citrus throughout the garden, which provides a pop of colour even through the winter months. She added a rustic touch by using old barrels for containers.

6 Lighting

Simple and elegant lighting keeps the focus on the home's details. For a similar exterior light, try the Southampton 1 Light Large Exterior Pendant in Antique Black, from Beacon Lighting.
